Why tax urban land and property? A policy discussion

By

Shahrukh Wani

Shahrukh Wani is an economist at the International Growth Centre (IGC)'s Cities that Work team based at the Blavatnik School of Government, University of Oxford. Shahrukh works principally on providing economic policy analysis to policymakers in Africa and South Asia on public finance and urban governance. He also writes on public policy in Pakistan that has been published in Dawn, among others.

Abstract: Taxes on land and properties represent one of the largest sources of untapped revenue sources for Pakistan. This policy presentation leverages economic evidence and practical experiences to highlight the importance of land and property taxation and provide an overview of the primary policy considerations when implementing this tax
